WOMAN STRUCK BY STREET CAR BADLY INJURED

Mrs. Augusta Koch, who had been shopping and crossed Mission street in front of the New Daly City Theater, was hit and rendered unconscious by a No. 14 Market Street Railway car last Friday afternoon. Mrs. Koch was given first aid by the Daly City police and taken by Chief Doyle in the city ambulance and first aid car to the South San Francisco hospital. Upon examination it was found that she was suffering from an injury to the brain and was badly bruised about the head and face.

When Mrs. Koch was picked up, no one who had witnessed the accident was able to identify her. Chief of Police Doyle, in an endeavor to identify the injured woman, broadcast a description of her to all the Peninsula police, the San Francisco police department and the newspapers.

It developed later that a son, Carl Koch, had searched and telephoned all day for his mother, thinking she was visiting friends. On Saturday he went to A. Vireno's store, on Mission street, to shop. Mr. Vireno told him of an accident to an elderly lady the day previous. He said "It can't be my mother, but from what you say it might possibly be."

The police were called and Koch, accompanied by Cheif Doyle, motored to South San Francisco hospital, where the boy identified the injured woman as his mother.

His sister, who had been enjoying her vacation in Los Angeles, was immediately notified and returned home.

Mrs. Augusta Koch bought the F. O. Anderson home, on Hanover street, a little over a year ago.

She is still in South San Francisco hospital in a critical condition.

FALSE IMPRESSIONS

The following appeared in the San Mateo Times last Monday, and all in favor of good government will heartily agree with the sentiments expressed in Mr. Amphlett's editorial:

An article in a San Francisco newspaper this morning conveys the impression that a great crusade is in swing in San Mateo county to "unseat the county government" for various vague reasons, insinuating, however, that something is very wrong with our officials and a mighty battle is in progress to redeem the county from its grasp.

Such articles in a great metropolitan paper are exceedingly unfair to this county. There are no great issues at stake in the county election other than who gets the offices. The incumbents, who have served faithfully and well, respectfully and sincerely ask the people to reward their services by re-electing them. Their opponents appeal to the voters to make a change and give them the jobs. There are no charges of incompetence or corruption and there can be none for none exist.

The time is not far distant when public officials will be given a tenure of office which will relieve them from the constant necessity of waging political campaigns to retain the offices which they have competently filled. A proper county charter could provide this. No well managed corporation would consider the proposition of submitting the election of its competent officers periodically to its stockholders, because real efficiency would be impossible under such a sysem.

There is little difference in the present system of county government. A county official who has served faithfully and well has a right to expect the appreciation of the public. Only incompetence, corruption or some similar serious cause should be the reason for changing our officials. There are no such conditions in this county at the present time, despite the insinuations of the San Francisco paper. The great problem before the voters is "shall the ins stay in or the outs get in?" nothing more or less.

WELFARE AND BOOSTER'S COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Williamson, of Vista Grande avenue, entertained the welfare and booster committee meeting of Colma-Vista Grande Aerie No. 1848, F. O. E., on Wednesday evening of last week. After the business session most delicious refreshments were served by the hostess.

Those who enjoyed the Williamson's hospitality were H. H. Smith, C. Hage, L. Johnson, E. R. Trier, Ed Heim, George Connolly, Harry Warren, B. G. Kost, William Bolger, William Merritt, T. L. Harper, A. J. Dalton, Eric Diehel, W. A. Geren, Fred Collins and Charles Williamson.

ANOTHER PIONEER OF STATE AT REST

John Dalton, aged 80 years, passed away in St. Joseph's hospital, San Francisco, July 24. He had been ill less than two weeks. Dr. J. Butler, who attended him, said: "It was just the breaking of a strong man."

John Dalton was known and beloved by many. He was a lover of the great wide, open spaces. For over forty-five years he was employed by the Spring Valley Water Company as keeper. He was a lover of dogs, and raised fancy game chickens and rabbits. He was also a lover of the rod and reel, and all out door sports. He was well versed in California history. He was the one who knew the spot on which the Terry-Broderick duel was fought. To him the committee in charge of erecting the monument to commemorate this act came for information regarding the correct location of the spot.

It was while he was employed by Spring Valley that he first met Billy Johnson, one of the oldest employees of the Spring Valley Company, and through him met his sister, Miss Mary Johnson, who later became Mrs. John Dalton. Johnson is still employed by the company as engineer at the pumping station at San Carlos.

Three children, two sons and a daughter, were born to them, A. J. Dalton, engaged in the real estate business and one of Daly City's Councilmen; John Dalton II, for the past twelve years engaged as a locomotive fireman for the Southern Pacific; and Miss Callista Dalton, employed in the treasury department of the Pacific Telephone Company. These three children were born in the Dalton summer home, where their grandmother lived, at Laurel Creek, which later became known as Beresford. They spent most of their early childhood there and at the family home on Niantic avenue.

John Dalton's parents died when he was but 2 years of age. He was born in North of Ireland, in County Monaghan. He was reared by an uncle and spent his childhood in all parts of the United Kingdom, in Scotland, Wales, Ireland and England. He came to Canada when a young man and worked on the Grand Trunk railroad when it was being built. From there he went to New York, where he was employed as a locomotive engineer on the elevated railroads.

Mr. Dalton traveled through every state in the Union, and finally settled in what is now known as Daly City.

One of his first positions here was with John D. Daly, who later became a very dear friends. Then he was employed by the Spring Valley Company. In all he worked 45 years for them, until a few months ago, when he received a pension from the company.

Mr. Dalton was buried last Monday from Lasswell's undertaking parlors, thence to Our Lady of Perpetual Help church for services. Interment took place in St. John's cemetery, San Mateo. The pall-bearers were H. H. Smith, mayor of Daly City; Lieutenant Jack Coyne of the San Francisco Fire Department; Caesar Restani, Fire Commissioner of San Francisco; Jack Doyle, Chief of Police of Daly City; Judge Ellis C. Johnson, of Daly City; John Walsh, of San Diego avenue.

RECKLESS MOTORIST CRASHES FIRE HOUSE

As a result of reckless driving, Louie Callori, 28 years of age, of 728 Athens street, was in the county jail last Monday. Callori is said to have been driving his car at a high rate of speed at 3 A. M., and crashed into the frame building occupied by the Visitacion Valley fire department, on Walbridge street, near the Bayshore highway. Ray Ford, the night fireman, was knocked out of his bed by the impact of the machine. Callori was treated at Mission emergency hospital for cuts and an injury to his nose. Constable S. A. Landini arrested him after his wounds had been dressed. He is to appear before Judge Ellis C. Johnson.

MISSING LOCAL MAN SOUGHT BY WIFE

Mrs. Menba Ohlrich, 330 Willits street, Daly City, has reported to Chief of Police John T. Doyle that her husband, Fred Ohlrich, has been missing from his home since July 17, 1930.

Ohlrich is described as being 31 years of age, height 5 feet 9 inches, weight 136 pounds, hair mid blond. He wore a gray suit, gray overcoat, gray hat with black band.

If located, notify John T. Doyle, Chief of Police, Daly City, Calif.

VACATION THOUGHTS AND RAMBLES

The partially free days of vacation, one by one slip by, each leaving some pleasant remembrance, but I must not neglect writing and my circle of readers entirely. There are still a few who might be disappointed if I did not indulge one of my weaknesses to a certain extent.

The last of June was crowded full with gathering together odds and ends of reports, duties and pleasures. The closing fiscal year emphasized its demands and the coming one had to be provided for.

Despite the national financial depression there were ample personal accomplishments to justify a feeling of contentment under the prevailing conditions. The schools had advanced, the patrons had kept their promises and the friends, new and old, had continued their loyalty. In addition the favor of good health permitted the hope of letting the promptings of ambition have sway for another year.

On July 3 through the kindness of W. H. Clay an automobile trip was made to Duncan Springs, where the rejuvenating waters, the enlivening sunshine, Mount Duncan, the guests, the manager and the employees were found to be just as appreciative as ever. The waters were partaken of, the baths were enjoyed, the old mountain was climbed, the Fourth of July speech was made, the spring pavilion dances brought back the glow of youth and on the seventh, regretting so short a stay, early in the morning we returned from the typical scene of a summer outing to the demands of business, with renewed vitality to make the work easier.

When physical ills are allayed and mental obsessions are overcome, how easy it is to perform the usual duties and obligations. Then frowns give place to smiles and friendliness banishes indifference.

So the admonition is given to all: find a way to shed mental and physical troubles at least once a year, even if doing so involve a fancied sacrifice of time or savings. Have no misgivings to the contrary for it is sure to prove profitable in the course of life.

Our state, California, is favored wondrously with beautifully located resorts, here and there, easily accessible by means of good roads. They are under such excellent management and offer so much for what they charge that there is no reason why many more people should not be benefited by enjoying their offerings. Try this just once and you will be converted and become a votary of summer outings.

On July 11, Horace Fellows, a peculiarly kind-hearted friend to many, invited the writer to spend the week-end at his summer cottage at Alta Vista. Such an invitation was accepted gratefully and the evening witnessed a hearty reception by Mrs. Madeleine Fellows and her two boys.

The next day all drove to Monterey, enjoying the seventeen mile drive and a lunch at the French Grill. Returning we spent the evening as the guests of Dr. and Mrs. Callson, who were vacationing at Santa Cruz. It was needless to say that entertainment quite interesting was maintained continuously. From Santa Cruz the return trip was by way of the Big Basin, where we paused for a brief spell to marvel at the magnificence of the mighty redwood trees. How fortunate for posterity it is that they are protected and will stand, luxuriating in their greatness, as long as our government maintains its sway, and may that be measured in centuries to come, not fewer than it has taken the trees to become what they are today!

Before reaching the Alta Vista cottage that Sunday evening the thought came often that the three counties, San Mateo, Santa Clara, and Santa Cruz constitute one vast park, a veritable pleasure land, full of entrancing, beautiful scenery at every turn. As the observant one is carried over the well kept modern roads he constantly feels the acknowledgment taking possession of him that the road officials, administrators and builders, despite the innuendos of selfishness, have done and are doing farseeing and honest work making California world renowned for its perfect thoroughfares. Generally they are well located, considering views of beautiful scenery, safety and ease for the motorists and avoidance of a heavy winter's damaging power.

During recent years great improvements have been made, equalizing grades, eliminating dangerous curves, and widening wherever possible. Formerly great expense compelled the engineer to hesitate, but now, thanks to unlimited funds, the only thought is the best highway possible and permanent, too. The roads are for the motorists and through the gasoline tax they pay for them and, on account of the big companies fighting occasionally, they never have felt the burden laid upon them.

No matter who becomes the next governor of California, this great work will continue, for the automobile is the chief executive of traffic development and what two million of its kind need becomes a reality very promptly. This power is vastly superior to the greatness of any candidate.

July 22, after a day's riding by means of the Pickwick's "greyhound," the latest contrivance for comfort, and the mountain mail auto, found the writer, in the evening, at Tassajara, the really celebrated hot sulphur springs of this state.

The scenic road of forty-seven miles, steep grades, sharp curves, one-way signs in a few places, has been written of previously, so for the present, suffice to state that the ride over it is an outing in itself, but unless you are a motorist with considerable skill and the possessor of a strong type of car, better depend upon the public conveyance, thereby saving yourself some stress of mind and not a little mechanical wear and tear.

The ride begins at Geoffrey Hotel, Salinas, and takes three and a half hours, including a ten minute rest at Jamesburg, a place of very few habitations where James Foster is postmaster and everything else, and especially the custodian of local and state political pointers. He is a real character, fully deserving of at least social patronage.

This year Tassajara is under the management of Charles Ayres, who has done very well in causing his guests to feel so contented nearly all of them wish to stay longer than the time planned. As a consequence he keeps the number up to an average of about a hundred. They come from various localities, but San Francisco, Watsonville, and Salinas are more prominently represented, as a rule. How do they pass their time at this resort? Shortly after 5 o'clock in the morning the activity begins, the Slavonian apple raisers of Watsonville being the early risers, thus continuing their home habits. At half past six the first breakfast bell rings, to give those going out an opportunity to eat before the auto stage leaves at seven. Quite a few get up to bid the outgoing guests goodbye and see them off, for even in a few days real friendships are formed.

The regular program of each day is the plunge bath in water from the

TEAMWORK WINS FOR LOCAL NINE

By HAROLD MARTIN

Playing spectacular baseball behind Gene Keagle's masterful pitching, Daly City defeated the Gold Bond nine, 4 to 3, last Sunday on Rolph diamond. Teamwork of the highest degree gave the Merchants this victory.

A timely hit off "Mo" Plansky's bat furnished a fitting climax to the thrilling contest. His single scored George Rettig from third base. There was two outs in the ninth frame when the winning run tallied.

Gene Keagle, local chucker, turned in the best pitching exhibition of the season Sunday. He allowed only six hits, walked two batters, struck out eight and was not responsible for any of the breadmen's runs. This was his second victory in as many starts.

One of the reasons for Keagle's excellent showing was attributed to his battery mate, Fred Strand. Besides working Gene to perfection, Fred made two putouts at the plate and trapped a runner trying to steal second base.

The two runs that were cut off at home were attained by perfect throwing from the outfield. Marcus Evenson and Sam Hawley were the local players to assist in the killings. Evenson's peg came in the fifth inning, and Hawley's in the ninth.

George Rettig and "Mo" Pualsky were the batting stars for the local nine. George obtained three safeties in five trips to the plate, while "Mo" garnered a brace of singles in four times at bat. The team collected only eight hits.

The Gold Bond nine made only one error, but it lost the game. Hatchey, third baseman, booted Rettig's grounder in the ninth frame. George then stole second and third through Pat Sloan's smart coaching, and then scored on Plansky's hit.

Manager Ed Cavagnaro secured the services of Ray Doyle for this contest. The former Daly City player came up with two hard chances and collected one hit in four times at bat. This young man gives the Merchants one of the strongest infields in the city.

Daly City will have another tough game on hands this week end. The Brotherhood of Railway Clerks will be the opposing nine. These teams were booked on a previous occasion, but rain prevented the game.

SURPRISE BIRTHDAY PARTY

A group of friends got together last Saturday evening and honored Miss Drusilla Felsch on her birthday with a surprise party. She received many lovely and useful gifts. One thoughtful member knew flowers are nice on such an occasion and had delivered to Miss Felsch's home on Risel street a large box of assorted flowers, which were used in decorating the home. At the close of a delightful evening, spent in playing indoor games, the guests partook of tempting refreshments served by the Mrs. George Felsch. The guests included Mrs. H. J. Evans, Miss Sylvia Evans, Norma Evans, Milton Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Evans, of San Francisco, Mrs. Florence Meyers, Mr. A. W. Hansen, Wililam Irvin, Jos, Bush, of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. George Felsch, June Felsch, George Felsch, and Miss Drusilla Felsch.

INDIA MISSIONARY COMES TO 'GRACE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Mrs. Ray Smith, widow of a missionary who died in India from cholera, will be the speaker in the Presbyterian church on Sunday evening at 7:45. She is a most winsome and attractive speaker and is an especial favorite with the young. Her many experiences in India make her remarks worth hearing. All are welcome at this service.

WESTERN PACIFIC LETS CONTRACT FOR EXTENSION

The contract for the building of the Western Pacific extension northerly from Keddie, in the Feather river canyon, to Bieber, in Lassen county, to link that railroad with the Great Northern, was awarded last Tuesday to the W. A. Betchel Company of San Francisco and the Utah Construction Company of Ogden, Utah, on a joint bid. Work will be started at once and will be rushed to completion at the earliest possible date.

The project, which equals in magnitude the appropriation for the first unit of the Boulder Dam construction, represents an outlay of approximately $10,000,000. According to engineers it is the most important project involving the construction of railroad lines to be undertaken in the last ten years within the borders of California.

The award of this contract sets in motion the railroad building that will make the Western Pacific an important part of a competitive route between California, Arizona and New Mexico on the south; Nevada, Utah and Colorado on the east, and the northern and northwestern states. When the last spike is driven, the additional through route will stimulate a greater exchange of commodities between the different states served.

Together with the extension of the Great Northern, about to build southward 88 miles from Klamath Falls, Oregon, to Bieber, this new construction will connect two great trunk systems. The Western Pacific's part of this link will swing norhward 112 miles through Pluma and Lassen counties on a line roughly midway between the Sacramento Valley and the Nevada boundary. It will serve a rich timber and agricultural section of Northern California.

It is estimated that about $4,500,000 will be spent for labor, while the material cost will be approximately $4,800,000. The balance represents cost of right of way, enginnering, etc. The contract calls for clearing about 1,500 acres of right of way. Approximately 3,000,000 cubic yards of rock and earth are to be handled in the grading of the roadbed. To ballast the main track with its 22 miles of siding, 354,0000 cubic yards of crushed rock or gravel will be required.

SEEK CONFERENCE ON WATER PROBLEM

Last Monday evening a regular meeting of the City Council was held, Councilmen Dalton and Twesten being absent. Mayor H. H. Smith presided.

A communication was received from the Colma fire department, asking the Council to set aside a time for a conference on the water situation in Colma. The clerk was instructed to notify the Colma fire department that the Council would meet with them on the evening of August 5, at 8 o'clock.

In the matter of traffic regulation at the intersection of Los Olivos avenue and Hillside boulevard, Mayor Smith reported that satisfactory arrangements have been worked out to handle the situation.

The monthly bills were read and ordered paid.

A motion prevailed to adjourn in respect of the memory of the late John Dalton, pioneer and father of Councilman A. J. Dalton.

POPULAR DALY CITY COUPLE ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT

Miss Doris Maloney, of Risel street, was the guest of honor at a birthday dinner given in her honor at the home of her sister, Mrs. R. Anderson, of Risel street, on Friday evening of last week. Miss Maloney announced her engagement to Mr. Victor Barskey, formerly of Daly City. The following were dinner guests, and heartily congratulated the happy couple: Mr. J. J. Maloney, Mrs. Peggy Hickey, Mr. Edgar Elliott, Grayce Graham, Al. Medley, Mr. and Mrs. R. Anderson, Miss Dorothy Maloney, Mr. Victor Barskey, Marjorie and Irene Anderson, Jack and Betty Hickey.

CROCKER P. T. A. STUDY AND SEWING CIRCLE MEET

Mrs. William Grantham, of Hanover street, entertained the members of the Crocker Study and Sewing Circle at her home last Monday afternoon. A busy and most delightful afternoon was enjoyed by those present. The sewing was interrupted to partake of delicious refreshments. Among those present were Mrs. J. Jordan, Mrs. Ivy Alexander and daughter Lois, Mrs. S. Millhauser, Mrs. O. Pauw, Mrs. E. Bolger, Mrs. F. O. Anderson and daughter Selma, and the hostess.

natural hot springs, 140 degrees, in the forenoon, followed by a massage treatment by the masseuer or the masseuese. In the afternoon they take the vapor bath in this way: First the cool shower or a dip in the flowing creek, then five or six minutes in the vapor chamber, at the end of which the natural hot sulphur water comes up spontaneously, creating such heat the prespiration and condensation pours off the body. This whole experience is generally repeated. One person fighting against too much defiance of the "noble experiment" continued it all one afternoon, and retired a law-abiding citizen.

The baths and the treatments are the fundamentals, but in addition there are numerous intresting incidentals, such as the swimming pool, a place of merriment and aquatic performance from 2 to 4 P. M. Hikes here and there for exercise.

Dancing on the spacious platform for a couple of hours in the evening is well patronized. The game of horseshoes has many votaries, an expert being present who could make a ringer very often. Occasionally the horseback riders attract attention. One morning a cavalcade of nine horses and one mule went forth with great equestrian spirit. Those who like a game of cards are busy shuffling and dealing at all hours.

People come here for all purposes, some to reduce, some to increase, some to drive away pain, some to forget their usual occupation, some to hike, swim, dance and be happy, some to look at the deer which are quite plentiful, a few to go trout fishing, and everybody to drink copiously of the hot sulphur water and have a big appetite for three big meals every day.

All of the resorts of California are favored with perfect days of still atmosphere and nights over which myriads of stars keep perpetual vigil with the moon when its phase is favorable, but Tassajara is different in this feature: When one has arrived he is located permanently, for the time, there being no easy way out for the diversion of an automobile ride, so he stays and renews himself both physically and mentally.

The masseuer says the ideal rest and recuperation of even Tassajara will not cause you to live longer in number of years, but he is sure a fortnight annually in such a place will cause your life to be fuller of ability to do things worth while and freer from the pains, aches and ills so common to most mortals.

The obligation to be present at the naturalization examination at Redwood City on the twenty-ninth compelled a return and it was made with keen regret after six days of thorough enjoyment. The ride out, beginning at seven in the morning, is even more interesting than going in.

Among the guests whose presence added not a little to the pleasant memories of this year were Emanuel Lewis, of San Francisco, and Miss Lily Kertell and Mrs. Jardine, of San Mateo.

As usual, this account has been written to pelase many good friends.

W. J. SAVAGE.

Often a man pays a lawyer for advice his wife could give him for nothing.

American progress will not halt so long as there are enough corners for the filling stations.

LOCAL CITIZENSHIP AND PATRIOTISM

During the last great national political campaign the American public was stirred by campaign speeches touching upon the subject of citizenship and partiotism, and some one has humorously remarked that the patriotism of the American people lies dormant except in time of war, political campaigns, and the Fourth of July. Judging by the indifference of many people to that great privilege of citizenship—the ballot—there would seem to be a grain of truth in this.

An examination of the records of local elections held during the past few years in Daly City discloses the fact that a great many of our citizens have not exercised their right to vote on matters of importance to this community. In order to insure a completely local government, every citizen should be a voter. (If we were not allowed to vote, what a coveted privilege it would be).

Every citizen of Daly City has a voice in whatever affects the general good. Each man's opinion carries weight if he will but take the trouble to express it. By his "yes" or "no" he can help to promote the welfare of his community and his county.

Like charity, good government begins at home. If each town and each county would consider its local problems and solve them by popular vote, the nation as a whole would advance in mighty strides.

Let us practice the higher principles of patriotism and citizenship through an awakened interest in county affairs. There is really no good reason why Daly City should not enjoy the enviable reputation of having over 95 per cent of our eligible voters registered and placing their ballots in the ballot boxes on election day.

Abraham Lincoln, who reckoned that the Lord loved the common people because he made so many of them, might be surprised to look down from his present supposed eminence to see that two of his granddaughters are millionaires, and therefore no longer common people. Mary Lincoln Isham and Jessie Lincoln Randolph, the granddaughters referred to, have these fortunes through securities in bakery and electrical enterprises, left by their late father, Robert Todd Lincoln.

FISH AND GAME NOTES

By J. H. NEUSTADT

Black bass fishermen who use live minnows for bait in the Sacramento-San Joaquin velley streams should remember that the use of minow seins in the taking of bait is illegal, according to the announcement of the Division of Fish and Game of the Department of Natural Resources.

Section 636 of the Penal Code of the state of California makes it illegal to use seins for taking non-game fish for bait in the inland waters. Through courtesy to the sportsmen, this provision of the law has never been strictly enforced. Recent flagrant violations have caused the officials of the fish and game body to demand that their wardens enforce the existing law.

The greatest damage done by the seiners is in the destruction of the nests of spawning spiny-rayed fishes, which include the black bass and the perch. These fish spawn in the shallow areas where minnows are most plentiful, and the pulling of seins over the spawning beds results in the destruction of nests according to the statements of the fish cultural experts of the Division of Fish and Game.

The enforcement of this law will not work a hardship on the sportsmen who depend upon the use of minnows for bait, provided the dip nets are not greater than six feet in breadth and are not baited.

Fame takes various forms, one of which is that attributed to Fred Burke, wanted for alleged participation in the noted Chicago massacre of seven Moran gangsters on February 14, 1929. In recent dispatches Burke was rated as a top-notcher by being characterized as "the most widely hunted gunman in tthe United States."

Florenz Ziegfeld, famed producer of the Follies and other notable stage successes, is said to be entirely devoid of musical or dancing talent. But he can pick those who have "It."

ATTORNEY W. H. CLAY

The campaign of Attorney W. H. Clay for Justice of the Peace of the First Township is receiving such general and favorable endorsement that old time politicians and those well informed are predicting a landslide for him at Daly City, with a heavy vote at South San Francisco and Burlingame at the coming primary election.

His learning and experience in the law qualifies him above all other candidates for the office, and he has a host of friends and supporters who are working diligently and earnestly for his election.—(Advertisement.)

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist. Her sister, Lillian, urges her to break off the affair, but Ernestine refuses. A runaway marriage follows. Loring Hamilton wins Lillian's consent to become his wife.

"I hope you didn't get up on our account, mother," she said gently, "but I'm glad you are better."

The woman looked up at Ernestine, her faded eyes, under the drooping brows, regarding this strange bird that had slipped so easily into her nest. How old she looked, thought Ernestine. She was a generation beyond mamma, for she was old with a gentle humility and meekness that Ernestine had never met before. There was not in her even the stubbornness that sometimes the meek can use so effectively.

Will's father Ernestine could understand. A carpenter, with a gift for woodcutting, he was a skilled and able workman and had a great pride in his trade. He was a tall, thin, stooped man, with a clean-shaved, heavily furrowed face and brightly saturnine, black eyes, which regarded Ernestine with a kind of grim humor. He made her realize without saying so, that he disapproved of their marriage as much as her people did, but that he was not the man to cry over spilled milk. They could count on his kindness.

At breakfast in the bright kitchen, Ernestine and Will made plans.

"You are welcome to stay here as long as you like," said Peter Todd, but the two shook their heads. They had already decided to be independent at once.

"We might just as well go today, and find a place to board until we can get an apartment," said Ernestine, looking very young and earnest. "I'll get my trunk from mamma's, as soon as we have found a residence. It's awfully good of you to want us here, but the house is small, and mother is really not well enough to have us."

Mrs. Todd said nothing, and Ernestine felt that she had never seen so dispirited a creature.

"If we get near town, mom," Will said, "we can save money on carfare. I know a place on Erie street one of the fellows told me about, where you can get a room and two meals, at a reasonable price, and it's in walking distance of the office. Anyhow, I think we ought to live alone."

"That's right," said Will's father. "It's the only way for young married people. If you need any money when you go to fixing up a flat I can lend you a little. I always have a few hundred dollars tucked away for emergencies," he explained to Ernestine. "I can let Will borrow, without interest, if he needs it. I own a house on Troy street that you could have if it wasn't leased. But the location is not good for you."

"We'll manage," said Will confidently, and Ernestine admired him.

They exchanged bright looks, and Mr. Todd said heartily:

"Well, come and visit us sometimes, anyhow."

It was soon time for them to go. Ernestine, in her squirrel coat and scarlet hat, bade her new relatives good-by. She felt that there were tears in the air, realized a little that these people were losing Will more definitely than she would ever be lost to her family. He was their only son, but they said good-by to him with quiet dignity. Ernestine admired their restraint, and was grateful for their good taste. They offered neither advice nor counsel, but allowed the young ones to go forth about their own affairs. The house on Erie street brought to Ernestine her first shock of reality. It was an ancient, smoke-blackened dwelling place, not far from the lake. Across the street from the house a five-story machine shop reverberated with activity. A secret-looking brown-stone house, with drawn blinds, stood on the corner. Ernestine felt that the apartment they spoke of so glibly was not so near. A sense of the irrevocable nature of the step she had taken swept over her. She was now Will's, and, as he had said to her father, his roof was her roof. His home was hers, and this was it. She had definitely abandoned her old way of life and set her feet in a strange country. The future was as remote from the past as though she were following him to a great distance.

Hand in hand they ran up the stone stairs and met a small plump woman, called Mrs. Bennett, with whom Will discussed rooms and prices, while Ernestine stood to one side, burningly conscious of the gold band on her third finger.

* * * * * * *

Ernestine was too good a sport to bemoan their conspicuous lack of money. Fresh from the rigors of a fine school, it was not hard for her to accustom herself to simplicity. Will discovered that she had a most practical nature. The forces which had driven her into marriage had not all been romantic. In adjusting herself to living on Will's pay, she was able to exercise some of her native ingenuity and shrewdness, and in that capacity she found a certain pleasure. It was fun to put herself on a basis of having no money to spend and then discovering how much she had grown accustomed to spending in the months since she had left school. Her trunk was full of pretty clothes. It was an element she did not at first appreciate.

CHAPTER IV

A Party at Pastano's

Mr. Poole was having a party for Ernestine and Will, and, according to prearrangement, Ernestine slipped downstairs ahead of time to show herself to Mrs. Bennett. She could not help but be proud of the evening dress mamma had given her for Christmas, and which she had not worn before. The yellow chiffon lay about her slender limbs delicately, subtly. She appreciated the illusive cobwebby hose that had come with the dress and the gold cloth slippers. The string of small real pearls which had come to her from her Grandmother Langley's estate, the pearl ring which daddy had given her to match her necklace, were the last touches of a perfect toilet. Will had appreciated her, this evening, his fine eyes glowing with admiration.

"You are lovely," he protested, as though she had denied it, and she swung herself about in the narrow room and gave him a languishing, mocking look. But she went down the carpeted stairs in a glow, her squirrel coat over her arm.

Mrs. Bennett got up with an admiring exclamation when Ernestine closed the door behind her. The latter advanced to the center of the room and pirouetted on her toes. A little, round, weary body, with tired eyes beneath a fringe of gray hair, Mrs. Bennett had long outworn personal egotism and was generous with praise and sympathy.

"Youth is the time to live, darling," she said to Ernestine. "My life is an old story, but you are young and glowing, and things are happening to you. It is better for you to have your hard times now, and grow old rich and strong, than to have the hardships in old age, as I have had them. But tell me, aren't you excited to be having a birthday party given in your honor by a great cartoonist?"

Ernestine laughed.

"He only wants to be nice to Will. He thinks it will please Will, and of course it does."

Mrs. Bennett maintained a discreet silence, and Ernestine turned to the mirror over a chest of drawers and looked at her reflection, running her hands over her sleek soft hair. She was a little thinner than she had been when she was married, and her eyes were big and dark in the delicate whiteness of her face. She was lovely with a breath-taking quality, her face shining with an inner spiritual excitement. It seemed to her as she stared that she looked too happy, too thrilled for every-day use. She must learn to dissemble.

"Sometimes, darling," Mrs. Bennett chided Ernestine gently, "I think you fail to realize what an effect you have on the people here—on the men. You are so different from the other girls these boys know. You bloom. You wear the face of love. It's hard on them. I want you to be very wise with Mr. Poole. It would be an easy thing for you to disrupt his friendship with Will. Will admires him, and his patronage means so much, just now."

"Will won't be jealous of any attention I pay to Mr. Poole, or that he pays to me," Ernestine said indifferently, "if that's what you mean. It won't hurt Mr. Poole to admire me. He's a nice old man, and he loves to admire women, and men, too, as far as that goes. It's part of his big heart, Will says. Anyhow, Will wouldn't be jealous of me—now." Her small face was so shining that Mrs. Bennett threw her advising instinct away with a gesture and came and kissed her young friend.

"Have a lovely time, darling. Pastano's has the distinction of being the very toughest place in all Chicago. It is beautiful, and not so dangerous as Mr. Pastano likes people to think. He is really very careful about the police. And then, too, you will be with Mr. Poole, who is a close friend of Ruby."

Will was at the door, grinning at them, his mobile mouth twisted into a kind of sardonic look that he wore at times, and that made him like his father. He had a great deal of poise, Ernestine often thought, considering his youth and scanty advantages. Marriage had changed him very little. He was, perhaps, somewhat more inflammable, but he took Ernestine and the life with her most naturally and without self-consciousness.

They went on to Pastano's, entered an unmarked doorway and climbed broad wooden steps with double doors at the top which opened upon light, music, heat and the sound of happy voices.

The big room was airy, its excellent ventilation a surprise to Ernestine, and an important factor in every one's pleasure and good appetite. Mr. Poole came to meet them, and Ernestine gave him her hand and her nicest schoolgirl smile. She wished Mrs. Bennett had not said anything to her about this man. She did not have to heed any warnings except those her husband gave her!

Following Mr. Poole among the tables, Ernestine thought about the many things Will had told her of this man, until she felt that she knew him perfectly. His remarkable gifts, his value to his paper, his carelessness of himself, his small vanities and prejudices, his indolence and drunkenness and his great charm, she knew. He was as natural and straightforward with every one as a child with other children. Yet he possessed also the authority and autocratic manner of the man of established reputation. He drew Ernestine's hand within the curve of his arm, and led her to a table reserved for their party.

All the places were filled except theirs, and the men rose to greet Ernestine. There was only one other woman, Mrs. Wiston, the wife of the syndicate editor of the Sun, a small beautiful woman with the face of a siren who can never forget her role. She had been married twice before she had met Wiston, and Ernestine knew that back in New England were the wife and child Wiston had set aside for her. Ernestine was conscious of the indignation common to married women against such an impostor.

"You Are Lovely," He Protested as Though She Had Denied It.

Wiston himself, a tall academic man with a ribbon to his glasses, Ernestine had met at the office, and John Tucker, called Tommy by every one, who was Will's rival for honors in the art room. The third man who was presented to her Ernestine did not know and she failed to catch his name. He was a small powerful looking individual, with a dark mustache, bright gray eyes and a vain and elaborate manner. The other two men, Underwood and Harrison, were from the Sun staff, and happy to be at any party, any time, any place.

They all sat down, Mr. Poole with one of the women on either side, and Tommy Tucker next to Ernestine, the pompous little man next to Mrs. Wiston, with the others grouped about the big table. Ernestine by now had forgotten her self-consciousness and became radiantly happy. She wished Will were beside her. She was only a half, and Will was the other half, and he ought always to be beside her, breathing as she breathed, turning as she turned. The idea delighted her, and she laughed at herself but felt still a deep joy in their unity.

Mr. Poole turned to Ernestine and told her softly that her youth and beauty were sweeter than sweet night itself. He took his glass in his hand.

"And more intoxicating," he said, "than this for which I have wasted half my life and most of my talents."

Ernestine, looking up in his kind face, knew instantly that in spite of his flowery words, and in spite of Mrs. Bennett's conventional fears, this great man had no predatory impulses toward her. He knew that she was deeply in love with Will. But to watch her, to speak to her, to listen to her voice, gave him pleasure. It was all he would ever want of her. Her instinct in this matter proved true, during the years of Will's association with Mr. Poole.

"And what have you two young pieces of impudence been doing since last I saw you?"

"We have dined in state at mamma's," said Ernestine, smiling mischievously. "Will missed the significance of it entirely. Papa has, under duress, forgiven him. He offered Will a job in his office."

"And what does Will say?"

"He didn't even pay any attention to it. He just said that he was satisfied with the job he had, thanks just the same, and went on talking to mamma."

Mr. Poole laughed with delight. "Doesn't he know what papa wants?"

"I don't know whether he does or not. But anyhow, papa knows that, now he has decided to forgive Will, Will doesn't intend to let it make any difference. Papa really would like to let us struggle along. He feels pretty disappointed in me. But mamma can't bear it. She is determined to take care of us, whether we will or no."

"But how can she, if Will does not change his employment?"

Ernestine's face grew firm. "She can't. I won't let her. I've made up my mind to have nothing but what Will can give me. I don't mind being poor."

"You must resist poverty," Mr. Poole said. "It is the deadly enemy of marriage."

Ernestine's small face was scornful. Poverty was not so black as it was painted, she observed. He looked at her.

"You do not believe me? Wait, then, and see."

"But we are poor now. It's fun to be poor."

"You—poor!" His amazement was so genuine that Ernestine looked at him in surprise. "My darling child," he reasoned with her, "you don't know what the word means. You two—still in the flush of first love, without children, without a house to burden you, without a responsibility! One bed will do for both of you, one room will hold two hearts together. You are well, you are eager, you are fed and clothed and housed. You have a trunk full of pretty clothes, an adoring mamma begging to do things for you. You do not know the cold and odious breath of poverty at all. I could show you its dark face: slums, little children with great heads and emaciated bodies, houses held together by strings—shambles! I'll show you pale girls, and prostitution, and bare shelves, and empty cupboards, and pride bent double. Lack is a cruel witch. Pray that you may never know her."

"Yet you just told me to wait!"

"Ah, but that was nonsense. Life will never be cruel to you."

They ate the excellent food put before them, and talked, the men arguing among themselves about a technicality in some one's work, Will and Underwood and Mr. Wiston deep in it, Mr. Poole and Tommy competing for Ernestine's attention. Presently Tommy was drawn into the men's talk, and Mr. Poole leaned close to Ernestine and became very confidential.

"Will tells me you are going to have a child. I think that is the last perfection. I always knew that he was gifted, but his marriage with you has established the certainty of his future. Such things are not accidents. He is the chosen of the gods, or one of their finest gifts would not be his. He has all the elements of success. And a wife and children will do the forging."

Ernestine's cheeks burned. She could not understand how Will could have told his still precious secret to Mr. Poole. But she exercised great self-command to be quiet and responsive to him. He went on praising Will, and assuring her of the brightness of his future, until, after a little, she forgot her confusion and told him her own feelings about Will.

The party grew very gay, and Ernestine joined in the general happiness. Without warning the tight little man with the powerful shoulders was on his feet. He bowed to Ernestine, and he bowed around the room, and everywhere hands began to clap and there were shouts of joyous approval at sight of him.

With a gesture indescribably complacent, he held up his hand for silence and got it instantly. Standing so, his chest pushed out like a pouter pigeon's, his body rocking back on his heels, his napkin in his hand, which he flourished from time to time, he began to sing.

It was Siegfried's cry of joy, when he passed through the flames and found the sleeping Brunhilde. Ernestine recognized it, as she recognized the man. He was Mostane, one of the world's greatest tenors. And she had criticized his manner! But now, all else was swept away, and she lived only through her ears, on which fell each perfect note. She knew in delightful anticipation what his golden voice would do next, and her heart soared with his voice.

He stopped abruptly, rocked a moment on his heels and then gently, softly, poignantly he sang without accompaniment:

Still wie die Nacht
Tief wie das Meer
Sol deine Liebe sein.

The tears rained down Ernestine's cheeks. He sat down in a storm of excited applause. Ernestine could not stop crying. She leaned on Will's shoulder, for he came and sat beside her and put his arm about her. When at last she could breathe steadily she rose and went around the table to Mostane and took his fat face in her two hands and kissed him.

There was a cheer from all the tables, and Will gleamed at her with approval for her spontaneity.

"Nothing else was adequate," declared Mr. Poole.

The hours passed in a trance. The patronage in the dining room changed, grew noisier, more turbulent. Girls came and went on the stage, and danced and sang, and twinkled pretty feet, and flicked bare knees. It was all an unreal blending of sight and sound and color, and Ernestine's heart was far away, in some lonely space with Will. Her being still trembled with that last swelling note. Dimly in her mind she felt an awakening of artistic comprehension, a spiritual understanding of the strength and power of perfect performance. Will had latent in him some such force, but it was far from impulses to such finished authority. Her thought was not that clear, but groping.

It was time to go home, and Ernestine wanted Will to take her away from the others. But she saw that Mr. Poole was not himself at all any longer. Will always took him home, from the office, from such affairs as this, to his flat. Ernestine felt that she could not bear to be parted from Will tonight.

She became conscious of a man standing behind her, a little to one side, regarding her gravely, quietly. She glanced up at him but did not know him. He was a huge man, with a great dark head and clear dark skin. He wore a sack suit, and his narrow tie glittered with a ruby of enormous size, set in a gold circle. On one of his big brown hands, which were covered with coarse black hair, was another such gem. Ernestine remembered with a feeling of faintness all the wild stories she had heard about Pastano's place being so disorderly. Will, at least, was sober, as he always was.

Mr. Poole now saw the stranger, greeted him and called him to the table.

"And this is Mrs. Todd, my young friend's wife. You know Will, of course, and the others. Ernestine, this is Ruby Pastano, jewel merchant, ward boss, and the owner of this dive. A bad man—a terrible man. Shake hands with him."

Mr. Poole was enjoying himself and looked up at Pastano with glee. Mr. Pastano did not smile. He still fixed on Ernestine that queer solemn look. He bowed above her.

"Sit down, Ruby, sit down!" commanded Mr. Poole thickly, and motioned for a waiter to bring a chair, which was produced instantly.

Mr. Pastano sat down between Mr. Poole and Ernestine, and she felt his gravity spreading about the table, so that all were a little quieted.

"This is my birthday," Ernestine explained graciously. "I am twenty-one years old today, and Mr. Poole was kind enough to have a party for me. Now that you have come, it is more charming."

"Your voice—" he said, his own tone soft and silky. "Where are you born?"

She told him, naively, the address of her mother's house.

Roman Highways Built for March of Legions

When the Romans set out to conquer the whole known world of their day, their practical minds came to their assistance, and they built, as the long arm of their conquests spread around the shores of the Mediterranean, permanent highways throughout their empire, primarily for the swift and safe movement of their troops throughout all the countries they conquered, says a writer in the New York Times.

Their first principle was to draw a straight line between their most important camps. The Appian way, which was begun in 312 B. C., one of their greatest achievements, extended throughout the length of the Italian peninsula from the Forum in the Eternal city itself to Brindisi, from which the legions embarked on their journeys to the east. The pillar set up by Pompey to mark the southern extremity of the great road may still be seen in the modern city.

The Romans built their roads by first cutting parallel trenches through the soil to indicate the width of the roadway, removing loose earth until a solid foundation was reached. Upon this four layers of materials were beaten down, the lowest usually of flat stone sometimes laid in mortar, above which a layer of coarse concrete of smashed stones was superposed. Above this was a layer of finer stones or concrete, on which was laid a surface of fine stones carefully matched. The width of some of their roads was 14 feet, on each side of which were unpaved roadways half as wide again.

Being Polite to Spirits

In Borneo many trees valued for their timber are regarded as being the dwelling places of good spirits. Superstition, however, comes to the aid of economic necessity and before he incurs the displeasure of the spirits by destroying their home, the native drives a hatchet into the trunk and returns to his family. If in the morning the hatchet has fallen to the ground it is a sign that the spirit willingly has left the tree for a new residence. It is remarkable, observes a writer in the Sydney Bulletin describing the hokus pocus, how consistently the hatchet fails to stay put.

Original Chautauqua

The first chautauqua assembly, known as the Sunday School Assembly, was in session August 4-18, 1874, as the result of a plan formed by Lewis Miller of Akron, Ohio, and Rev. John H. Vincent of New York. The assembly plans widened rapidly in successive years. In 1879 a school for teachers in secular subjects was opened. Probably chautauqua is best known in connection with the plan of systematic home reading. The plan was proposed and explained in 1878. The first year 7,000 persons were enrolled and from that time readers varying in number from 8,000 to 25,000 have joined the circle per season. There are now throughout the United States and Canada more than 550 local assemblies modeled after the original chautauqua institution.

Old Greek Burial Custom

It was a custom among the ancient Greeks to dedicate the finest pieces of embroidery and weaving in honor of the dead, at funerals. These were usually wrought by the relatives.

ROADS AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Iowa is showing the nation how to relive unemployment, and, at the same time, benefit the public.

The state has accelerated its highway program. Thirty thousand workmen on Iowa roads will earn eighteen million dollars this year. And a multitude of cities, towns and rural communities will enjoy the propsperity that always accompanies intensive road building.

At the end of 1920 nine-tenths of its roads were mud. At the end of 1930, eight-tenths of them will be surfaced.

The greatest present road need is the construction of practical and comparatively inexpensive secondary farm to market highways that will give agricultural communities all-year contact with the markets. The American Farm Buerau Federation has repeatedly pointed out that so long as 5,000,000 of the 6,200,000 American farmers are barred from these markets during several months of the year by mud, we will have a farm problem of increasing seriousness.

The modern application of asphalts and road oils to dirt, macadam and gravel surfaces is making possible the building of tens of thousands of miles of low cost, waterproof surfaced, secondary roads which would have been out of the question a decade ago.

AN AMAZING FACT

The first gas stove in the United States was exhibited in 1879.

That was fifty-one years ago—little more than two generations. Yet in that brief half century gas has become a necessity in millions of modern American homes.

The amazing progress, both industrial and domestic, made by the gas industry, is a dramatic page in the history of the United States.

A life insurance company figures that a boy reared to the age of 18 has an economic value of $28,654. But the company isn't in the market for any of them at that price.

THE SUMMER GIRL

The summer girl is with us again, more bewitchinng than ever, if such a thing be possible, says a noted contemporary. No mere man could describe how she gets that way, least of all the typewriter pounder who writes this.

But we have run across a little dissertation on the subject by an expert in matters feminine which may be of interest, especially to the summer girl herself, so we pass it along:

"Her summer wardrobe is made up of little frocks, simple affairs of cotton or linen, or of the less formal silks, that she slips over her head and ties in the middle. Her favorite hat is a beret. Linen overalls with straps crossed in back, basket-weave coat with belt stitched in, cotton pique suit with handkerchief linen blouse, French hand-made lingerie blouse with cotton pique skirt—these are some of the clever little outfits with which the 1930 summer girl or woman—and all women are girlish nowadays—enhances her attractiveness and finds comfort all day long.

"Summer time calls for plenty of such clothes, and they are kept spic and span by means as modern as the summer girl herself. Spinner washers operated in the home swish the clothes clean, spin them dry, and keep the wardrobe always ready for this lively summer recreation seeker. Her swimming suit needs little attention, but it is a business-like affair that really lets her swim. Her beach suit begins in nothing much and ends in trousers. All in all, the 1930 summer girl is delightfully healthy and devastatingly chic."

To which we may only add: All hail to the summer girl; long may she wave!

Most of us envy the fellow who is morally and financially independent enough to stay away from people and places that bore him stiff.

It isn't wise to assert too much personality at a busy street intersection.

AIMLESS READING

Reading of the kind of novels in which most persons indulge for recreation or time-killing is bad for the mentality, according to Lafcaido Hearn, author and critic, who compares the habit to that of drinking or opium smoking.

Reading merely for amusement, he says, helps to pass the time, but keeps up a perpetual condition of dreaming that eventually destroys the capacity for thought.

It may be that Hearn rather overstates the case, but it must be admitted that those whose sole object in reading is to be entertained never develop any great mental abilities. This does not mean that novel reading is in any way detrimental if indulged in moderation, or as a relaxation from serious study or application. Many if not most of the greatest thinkers and doers have found mental relief in the reading of fiction.

But there are novels and novels. And those who spend all their spare time in devouring one commonplace novel after another thereby give evidence of a lazy and shallow intellect. In order to develop, the brain must have exercise in thinking, and that wholesome exercise is not provided by the kind of novels that most confirmed novel-readers read.

ODD-PENNY PRICES

We are so accustomed to articles in stores priced at 98 cents, $1.49, and other odd-penny amounts, that few persons give any thought to what once was considered a freakish idea of price-making.

But G. H. Cilley, a well known store advertising manager, tells in a recent article that the custom arose from the solution of a practical problem by a shrewd merchant.

When Captain Roland H. Macy got tired of sailing the briny deep as a sea captain and started a store in New York, there were no cash registers or other means for checking up his clerks. Money received for purchases were put in an old-fashioned cash drawer which made no records, and the practice of "knocking down," a euphemism for plain stealing, by clerks, was quite prevalent.

Macy changed all prices to odd-cent amounts, establishing cashiers to make the required change, and kept a close watch on the cashiers. His advertisements of these odd prices seemed to strike the public eye favorably, and he got a great response. What was at first only an expedient to keep from being robbed developed into a potent psychological appeal to his customers.

Thus the odd price has survived many years after the original reason for its adoption ceased to exist.

A POWERHOUSE AFLOAT

Some months ago, when the Tacoma municipal electric system broke down on account of a severe drought which reduced its hydro-electric output, the Navy loaned the airplane carrier Lexington to the city, and its power plant was used to temporarily supply the deficiency.

This seems to have given a New England power company a big idea. Recently the company bought an old ship and converted it into a floating powerhouse of 20,000 kilowatts capacity. The ship is to be used up and down the coast to hook up with any local systems which may be suffering from a shortage of power from time to time.

Now the feasibility of employing such floating power plants inland as well as coastwise is being considered by electrical engineers, who declare that such ships may be adapted to operate along lakes and rivers as well as along the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf coasts.

If such movable plants can be operated with a fair degree of economy, they should eventually prove a most important auxiliary source of power for use in emergencies, turning the wheels of industry, which would otherwise be stopped for want of "juice."

EPILEPTICS CURED

Another disease which hitherto has been baffling to physicians seems in a fair way to be conquered. Doctors Helmholz and Haddow of Rochester, Minn., have just made a report of eight years of investigation and treatment of epilepsy with most encoraging results.

The report covers the cases of 141 patients treated, of which number 43 were cured, 32 were improved, and 66 were not benefited. The treatment consisted of a special diet rich in fats, and was originally worked out by Dr. Russell M. Wilder, formerly of the Mayo clinic.

While the results are by no means uniform, and in some cases were of no benefit to the sufferers, the percentage of patients cured or improved is encouraging. Very little is known about epilepsy, so anything attempted in the way of treatment in the past has been a mere experiment.

It now appears that the scientists are on the right track, and the prospect for a complete mastery of the disease is most promising.

"Mother's Vacation" is the title of a movie. It is about the only kind of vacation the majority of mothers will ever see.

Two Hours From Garden to Can

Canning String Beans in a Steam Pressure Canner.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Each year as the time approaches when the garden surplus must be cared for, the homemaker finds herself wondering whether there is any new and easier way to do her canning and yet have as good results as usual. According to the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, however, the same principles that have been advocated for the past four or five years are still essential for satisfactory home canning of fruits and vegetables. The most important points might be expressed in a few sentences:

"Two hours from garden to can" to insure fresh sound products.

Use the "hot pack" when possible so that the material at the center of the can will reach the necessary processing temperature more quickly. Nonacid vegetables are always more satisfactory if hot packed.

Can nonacid vegetables under steam pressure because they require sterilization at a higher temperature than that of boiling water (212 degrees F.).

Before beginning any canning, it is well to send to the department for Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home," and read it carefully. In addition to a clear explanation of the reasons behind the various recommendations made, the bulletin gives time tables for a number of fruits and tomatoes, which may be canned by the water-bath method, and for most common vegetables, for which the steam pressure canner should be used. The reason why the steam pressure canner is necessary for string beans, peas, corn and other nonacid vegetables is this: The bacteria on these vegetables are very resistant to heat. Though these bacteria might be destroyed by six hours of processing at the temperature of boiling water (212 degrees F.), as in the water-bath canner, in the course of this long-continued boiling the flavor and texture of the vegetable itself is ruined. With the steam pressure canner a temperature of 240 degrees Fahrenheit can be obtained quickly at ten pounds pressure. At this high temperature bacteria cannot survive long, and the canned vegetables are easily processed to insure against spoilage without overcooking at the same time. In 30 to 60 minutes can be accomplished at 240 degrees Fahrenheit in the steam pressure canner what would take six hours of boiling at 212 degrees Fahrenheit. The pressure canner is a time saver so far as the processing of all vegetables except tomatoes, pickled beets or other very acid mixtures are concerned.

Fairy Tale for the Children

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

He had just met a new friend—the little boy adventurer whose name was David.

He wondered what the name of his friend might be and he had therefore just asked him.

The friend had told him that his name was Compass.

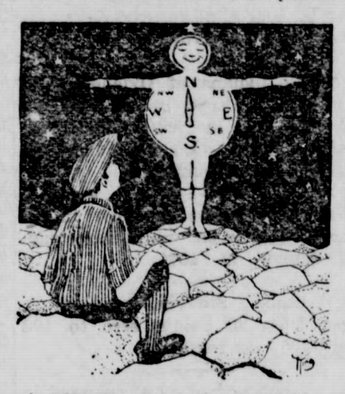
He seemed very pleased about his name, and as David asked him more questions Compass repeated his name once more.

"Yes, my name is Compass, and I always get the head and tail of everything. You know some never do. They say they can't see the head or tail of anything. But I do because I make it a rule to always keep my self well brushed up on the four most important points, North, East, South and West.

"Beautiful earth, isn't it?" he asked suddenly. "You've no idea how much I'm attracted by it."

He seemed very much excited about this. "Yes, the earth attracts me and it is responsible for making me point with my head to the north and my feet to the south, while to the right of me is always the east and to the left of me is always the west.

"I keep in touch, too, with what is going on, for you may have heard that the first letters of the four points I



"My Head to the North."

keep so well brushed up on spell News."

"You must be a great favorite," David said.

"People are always asking each other what the news is."

"I am," said Compass. "And from the East and the North and the South and the West come all sorts of interesting facts and stories which make up the great news of the world.

"But my great job is in telling directions. You can also tell direction by the sun. I don't want to claim all the glory. Can't, for that matter, anyway.

"The midday sun is south of where you live and it casts its shadows toward the north.

"That is why, you know, the moss upon trees in your part of the world always grows so well on the north side of the trees.

"If you are ever lost in the woods, David, you can tell directions by seeing where the moss is. You know how people choose the cool part of the piazza—so do the mosses choose the cool part of trees.

"Of course there are always things we don't like about our jobs. I always have to look straight ahead and point to the north when I'm on duty.

"No matter how much I should want to turn around and point south I couldn't do that.

"It would confuse people and I'd be a disgrace to the Compass family—I'd be considered a Compass of no use and of no value and a failure."

With that Compass was off and David watched him. He was facing the north and he held out his arms a little to either side as though to show that on the right he was pointing to the east and on the left he was pointing to the west and that back of him was the south.

"Good-by, Compass," David called.

"Good-by," Compass shouted.

But he did not turn his head. He was on duty now.

HINTS FOR HOUSEKEEPERS

To keep the natural bright color of the fruit in preserves, rapid cooking is necessary.

The coldest place in the refrigerator—just under the ice chamber—should be reserved for baby's milk.

Avoid overloading the washing machine. If the clothes can move about freely during washing, the cleansing action is more effective.

Light, airy clothes closets equipped with hangers for dresses and coats and racks for shoes and hats lengthen the life of clothes and save time and expense in caring for them.

Freshly-picked greens may be canned for meals next winter. Shrink them first; then can either by using a steam pressure cooker or by adding acid and cooking in the cans in a hot water bath.

Some Tasty Foods for the Table

By NELLIE MAXWELL

A dish that is attractive and most tasty and one nice enough to serve on any occasion is:

Orange Jelly With Orange Custard. — Prepare a mold of orange jelly and when partly thickened beat well until light and foamy. Turn into a fancy mold and chill. Unmold and serve with:

Orange Custard.—Take two large oranges and arrange the sections in a serving dish. Scald a pint of milk in a double boiler and pour over four egg yolks beaten with four tablespoonfuls of sugar, flavor with a half teaspoonful of the grated rind of the orange, add a pinch of salt and cook until the mixture coats the spoon. Cool, add the orange sections and pour around the unmolded jelly when serving.

Orange-Cherry Frozen Salad.—Soak a tablespoonful of gelatin in two tablespoonfuls of cold water and dissolve over hot water. Whip one cupful of heavy cream, add one-fourth cupful of powdered sugar, one tablespoonful of lemon juice and one cupful of mayonnaise. Mix well and fold in one and one-half cupfuls of orange sections and one-half cupful of chopped maraschino cherries. Pour into a mold and pack in layers of ice and salt, or put in the tray of an iceless refrigerator and chill until firm. Serve garnished with crisp hearts of lettuce.

Combination Fruit Salad.—Take one cupful of orange sections, one small can of diced pineapple, one banana cut into small pieces and one cupful of halved strawberries. Mix very carefully with mayonnaise to which three times the bulk is whipped cream and serve in lettuce cups topped by a whole strawberry.

Lemon Cream Sherbet.—Mix together one and one-third cupfuls of sugar and one cupful of strained lemon juice, then add one pint of milk and a pint of thin cream. Turn into the freezer and freeze. Serve in sherbet glasses; garnish with a sprig of frosted mint. Dip the mint into white of egg and then into granulated sugar, or powdered may be used if it is preferred.

With the fresh fruits and berries so plentiful each in its season, one may have variety with nearly every meal.

Blackberry Pie.—Line a plate with plain crust. Take two and one-half cupfuls of fresh blackberries, sprinkle with three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, a few grains of salt, two tablespoonfuls of flour, and add two tablespoonfuls of currant jelly previously whipped with a fork. Turn into the pastry lined plate, moisten the rim with water and cover with a top crust of rich pastry. Flute the rim and bake thirty-five minutes in a hot oven at first, then reduce the heat and finish baking.

Two human loves make one divine.

Vegetables Liked With Roast Lamb

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Custom has placed special emphasis on two accompaniments to roast lamb—peas and mint sauce. But there is no rule, social, culinary, or dietary, requiring this combination, or preventing the use of other relishes and vegetables. Variety in the menus and contrast in flavor, color, and texture are assured by changing occasionally to other combinations, says the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

Vegetables which in themselves are pronounced in flavor are especially appropriate with a roast of lamb. The same is true of lamb chops, stuffed breast of lamb, and other lamb dishes. In a lamb stew, onion, green pepper, and turnip, all having decided flavor of their own, give zest to the meat flavor. And when roast lamb is reheated there is the fine and unusual relish obtained by making a curry sauce.

For the roast relishes like currant jelly, spiced conserves and pickles, and horseradish sauce are all good, in addition to any vegetables served. English cooks sometimes have caper sauce or mint sauce, both of which are made with vinegar to give a pleasant mild acidity of flavor. American cooks seem to like their mint occasionally in the form of a green-colored jelly made from apple pectin and flavored with mint, or as mint gelatin served as a salad or a garnish.

Sleeveless Garments Liked by Small Boys

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A small boy likes sleeveless garments on hot days as much as his sister does. Boys of any size will wear their sleeveless jerseys or bathing suits all day long, if allowed to do so. Most children under six, however, whether boys or girls, need a great many washable garments, especially in summer time, and for these, cotton fabrics are the best choice. The boy in the picture is wearing a sun suit under his overblouse of of chabray matching the short trousers, and whenever his mother thinks it is time for a sun bath he will take the upper part off.

Sleeveless Overblouse With Sun Suit Underneath.

This type of sleeveless coat or blouse was designed for the small boy by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. The block-shaped trimming down the side front opening gives a tailored finish. Flat neck finishes are recommended on practically all children's clothes, so the trimming is continued as a flat facing around the neck. Three large flat buttons are placed where the boy can manage them himself. An overblouse and suit like this should be made of a fabric with enough body to be laundered without starching so there will be no scratchy seams to irritate a child's tender skin. Plain ginghams, percale and broadcloth are good selections.

Boys like colors. Let them have those which are strongly masculine in quality, leaving dainty, delicate shades for the little girls. Never ridicule or ignore a child's likes and dislikes with regard to color or design of his clothes. With a little guidance he will soon develop good taste and have great enjoyment from the colors and kinds of fabrics he has chosen. The mother's part is in producing garments that are well cut and well made, if she wishes her boy to be distinctively dressed. Accurate cutting, followed by straight, fine, close stitching gives that air that accompanies beautifully tailored clothes.

Eradicate Roaches

The standard remedy for eradicating cockroaches is sodium fluoride dust sprinkled in the cracks and crevices. A dust gun or blower is the most effective method of application. The roaches come out, die in a few hours, and may then be swept up and disposed of. Sodium fluoride is poisonous to humans as well, so is handled with care.

Suez canal dues will be reduced September 1, owing to increased receipts of the last year.

Separate Jacket Holds Popularity

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

A vogue which has been flourishing since early spring and which is scheduled to carry over through midseason and into early fall, with even greater emphasis, is that of the separate jacket or short coat which gaily contrasts the dress over which it is worn. Throughout the advance fall showings the theme is being interpreted in versatile ways.

Just now jackets in bright red are quite the thing worn over white sports dresses or those of natural colored shantung. The costume in the picture is typical. This outdoor ensemble which tops a white frock with a vivid red jacket is made of a bemberg material especially woven for sports wear. The dress is very simple, to all appearances, but it asserts its chic in such style-convincing details as a fitted-at-the-hipline skirt which develops wide box pleating at the hemline, also the square-cut neckline finished with a soft-tied bow at one side. The gown has short sleeves which is really much smarter than sleeveless. Take note of the narrow red suede belt, the red heels on the white kid pumps, the white beret with a flange made of the same fabric as the dress, and the white washable pull-on gloves, for these are all items which merge into a unit of ultra modishness.

Jackets of most every color will enliven the autumn landscape. A sprightly effect is that of the orange-color coatee worn over the dress of primrose yellow, and then there are those lovely pastel combinations such as a jacket in Patou pink with the frock of hyacinth blue. Bright navy blue with white, the navy coat cut along nautical lines, is ever so popular. Usually the white shoes boast trimming touches which repeat the gay tone of the jacket.

Those little paletots which are creating such a furore this season, being so amusingly quaint and old-fashioned, are awfully smart. For these, velveteen is a favorite medium, tuned in coloring to the dress with which it is worn. For instance a brown and yellow print dress calls for a paletot of solid brown velveteen; if the paletot be fitted in basquelike forms, if the sleeves be nothing more or less than shoulder-cape flaps over the arm, so much the better, for it is the novelty of the thing which counts.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

THE TOY VILLAGE

As David sat before the map it seemed as though it was growing larger all the time, growing and growing, and still keeping on growing.

But as the map kept growing he noticed with a start that he had grown smaller.

He was quite tiny now but he felt very much relieved about this. Certainly if the whole world were going to turn into a map as it appeared to be doing, it would be much more convenient for him to be small. No map, no matter how large, could ever be the size of the whole world, and so it was better that he was smaller and more of a map size.

He got up and found that walking on the map was just exactly like walking on the ground. He walked a little distance to watch from one side what was going on. He chose a comfortable part of the map upon which to sit when all of a sudden the map no longer looked like a map.

Instead it seemed to be just like a little world with little rivers and hills and lakes and oceans. And he was now sitting off watching, he said to himself, the growth of the world.

The ants had completely disappeared.

There were signs dotted everywhere. To the left of him he read "Pacific Ocean," and he could see one far to the right which had a sign near it which read "Atlantic Ocean." He could just make out the two words. Not far away from that was his home state. Certainly he had gone far off when he had stepped to one side while the map was growing.

"It's just like the toy village which I saw at the fair this summer," David thought. He had loved that toy village. It was exactly like a village only very much reduced in size. This was like a toy world. Now the hills had grown so high he could not see Atlantic Ocean's sign and he felt the toy world was much larger than any toy world could be.

He thought perhaps he had better stay here, near the Pacific Ocean, until he could get his bearings and make sure where he wanted to go next. But as he began to make up his mind a little chap, just about David's size, came and stood in front of him.

"Let's sit down," his new friend said, after he had shaken hands.

"I'm thinking of adventuring," David remarked.

"All right." He didn't seem to be nearly so impressed as David felt he should be.

"It's no surprise to me," he added after a moment. "The General Overseer told us all you were going to adventure."

"I don't know him," David said. "How could he have known I had made up my mind to see this world, this magic kind of map?"

"Toy world? Magic kind of map? So that is what you call it?" David's visitor laughed.

"What would you call it?" David asked.

"A Living Map! For that is what it really is! And when you are adventuring you will only meet the Map people—you won't meet any of your own friends. You may hear of other people but you won't meet them. You'll meet only those who are important in a Map way just as you're meeting me." The speaker stretched out his legs. Yes, he was just about David's present size.

"Were you ever any bigger?" David asked. "I was."

"No, to the first question. And as to your second remark—I already knew that. But you see when it happened that you fell into the Living Map you quickly became the size of a Living Map person. We couldn't have one giant—or some one almost approaching that size going about with us. It would be much too awkward."

"Sleeper"

What is a sleeper? One who sleeps, of course! Yes, and a lot more than that.

A sleeper is a railroad car in which a sleeper sleeps. A sleeper is a block that holds the rails on which the sleeper runs while the sleeper sleeps. Therefore, while the sleeper sleeps in the sleeper, the sleeper carries the sleeper over the sleeper until the sleeper which carries the sleeper jumps the sleeper and awakens the sleeper in the sleeper by striking the sleeper under the sleeper so that there is no more sleep for the sleeper who was asleep in the sleeper over the sleeper.

KEEPING PACE WITH COUNTY PROGRESS

With the timely slogan: "Keeping Pace With County Progress," furnishing the requisite punch for his campaign, Surveyor George A. Kneese is going into the closing weeks imbued with the hope that the electors of all sections of the county will return him him to office with a clear majority on August 26. Recognition of the able service the popular official has given to the taxpayers in the last twelve years merits the rolling up of such a vote at the primary that it will be unnecessary for him to run at the November election.

A visit to the Court House in Redwood City is an eye-opener to the citizen who, busily engaged in his private affairs, finds little time to see just how things are managed in the imposing stone structure dedicated to public use. It must be said that everywhere is an atmosphere of courteous activity and in no rooms is that pleasing condition more accentuated than in those of the County Surveyor. It is plain that the county's business is being attended to competently and expeditiously.

"The statutes of the state prescribe the duties of this office minutely," said Mr. Kneese, "with a system resulting in the disposition of the work as it comes to us. The system can truly be described as constructive. I can say in all sincerity that I have perfected a working force that is second to none in the entire state of California.

There is the closest kind of connection between the improvements going forward all the time under the control of the county and those of various municipalities. It is esesntial that the utmost harmony should prevail in all those steps. With George Kneese as County Surveyor the larger political unit has an advantage, but with no detriment to the smaller divisions. Mr. Kneese is City Engineer of seven of the cities and consequently complete co-ordination of work is possible.

"I have established contact between the county and the cities that brings about substantial economies to all," said Mr. Kneese. His manner of speaking could leave no doubt in the hearer's mind that he has done exactly as pointed out.

The county has been making rapid progress in the last few years, and it would be an error that might set us back irretrievably if County Surveyor George A. Kneese, who is right out there in the vanguard, were not returned to his duties. His defeat would spell irreparable loss to our county.

LAXITY OR IGNORANCE CAUSES OF ACCIDENTS

The campaign to reduce automobile accidents, started by President Hoover and supported by the casualty insurance industry and other private and public organizations, can achieve its object only with the aid of two things —public interest and co-operation and modernization of our traffic laws.

So long as the inexperienced or incompetent are allowed to drive automoblies, accidents will continue to rise. So long as our traffic regulations are inadequate and unenforced, we will be powerless to cope with the problem. Too many drivers regard traffic laws as something to be evaded. Not enough of them are interested in having their officials change outmoded laws in favor of codes that are adequate to deal with our modern congested, high-speed traffic.

In the words of President Hoover: "There has been much effort to better traffic conditions but the accident rate, nevertheless, continues to rise because the increasing volume of traffic outruns our efforts." In the past ten years millions of new cars, capable of great speeds, have appeared on the highways, while our regulatory machinery has remained practically unchanged.

If the present trend continues, automobile accidents will soon cost us a billion dollars a year and will take 35,000 or more lives annually. That is a terrible price to pay for our laxity or ignorance in handling traffic. A united, active public consciousness is necessary to reduce the increasing toll of deaths and injuries.

ELLIS C. JOHNSON PROVES UPRIGHT, CAPABLE JUDGE

When the big vote is counted on Tuesday, August 26, ballots for Judge Ellis C. Johnson will be far in excess of those for other candidates for Justice of the Peace. That prediction is made by conservative observers in all sections of the large township in which he has held court for an extended period. His record speaks for itself and all indications are the electors will put him over strong.

Judge Johnson promises to get a majority of the votes at the Primary and in that event it will not be necessary for him to run at the General election in November. That is as it should be. He is deserving of the recognition that comes from an overwhelming vote. Citizens are aware of his eminent fitness for the office as shown by his services in past years.

The judiciary is one branch of the government in which there should not be frequent changes. Once an upright and capable judge is found he should be kept on the bench. It was an extremely wise provision of federal lawmakers to make the term of Federal judges for life. Our state statutes do not provide for supreme, appellate, county or township judges to be chosen for life and the next best thing is to return the efficient ones to office whenever election rolls round.

Judge Johnson has made a thorough canvass of the township from North Burlingame to the County Line and everywhere has met with the heartiest reception. Put your shoulder to the wheel and do all you can for the Judge.

SPARKLING COMEDY COMING TO GEARY THEATRE ANGUST 4

"Choose neither woman nor linen by candle-light" runs the old proverb, which offers the text for "Candle-Light," the comedy which comes to the Geary Theatre on Monday night, August 4, following "Caprice."

Provided with a plot and situations which in themselves are ludicrously funny, "Candle-Light" is possessed also of smart, sparkling dialogue written by the famous playwright novelist, P. G. Wodehouse. It is an adaptation from the original German of Siegfried Geyer, which convulsed the leading cities of the European continent for several seasons. In London it ran for eighteen months; and, when it came to Broadway, New York, responded to its humors for eight months more.

Eugenie Leontovich, who plays the leading feminine part, has been universally acclaimed for her charm and vivacity. More, she has been hailed everywhere as a new and brightly shining star of the American stage. She has been called "the most genuinely funny lady comic since Beatrice Lillie made her first appearance."

Reginald Owen, who will be seen in the leading male role, is undoubtedly one of the most polished high comedians now appearing before the American public. He is also responsible for the direction of "Candle-Light," and left the company while it was in the east to fulfill his engagement with Miss Bainter in "Caprice," now at the Geary.

Alan Mowbray is another actor who has made a name for himself not only in America but in Europe as well. He was last seen here in "The Second Man" and "The Doctor's Dilemma."

REGISTRATION OF 32,000 NEW RECORD FOR COUNTY

Approximately 32,306 San Mateo county voters will be eligible to go to the polls at the primary election, August 26.

This figure, announced by County Clerk Elizabeth M. Kneese, sets a new record for registrations in this county, bettering the total registration for the general election in 1928 by more than 2,000, and indicating that a record number of votes will be cast at the primaries.

The total registration in 1928 was 30,159. The goal set this year was 32,000. The total vote cast at the 1928 general election was 25,046.

The county clerk's figures reveal that there ahe 6,222 eligible voters in Burlingame. San Mateo is second with 6,128, Redwood City third with 4,144, and Daly City fourth with 2,871.

Although Burlingame leads, it shows the smallest increase in registration. There are only nineteen more eligible voters in Burlingame this year than in 1928 when there were 6203 qualified to vote at the general election.

San Mateo shows the biggest increase in registration with 804 new voters listed. The 1928 figure was 5,324. Redwood City, Daly City and South San Francisco show substantial increases. Colma's registration is 577.

DIGNITY CHARACTERIZES DR. McGOVERN'S CAMPAIGN

Dignity characterizes the campaign of our esteemed friend, Dr. J. C. McGovern, for the important office of coroner. Dr. McGovern realizes the position he has held for sime time is a vital cog in the county machinery, and has invariably carried out his functions in the spirit that should win the commendation of all thinking citizens.

Particularly conscientious at all times that the county's interests should be conserved, Dr. McGovern has secured the support of the people in all sections of our community. His campaign has demonstrated to him that his services in the last few years have been recognized and that a heavy vote will be given to him at the coming primary.

Dr. McGovern asks for the suffrage of the electors of the county on the basis of his record. He has performed the duties of the office of Coroner in an exemplary manner, always on the alert for the welfare of the mass of citizens. The least that can be done done in appreciation of his efforts is to return him to office.

Although the registration may not have been as large as was hoped for by proponents of good government, there will be ample opportunity for the legion of friends of Coroner McGovern to do the handsome thing for him. If it is not asking too much, see that all your neighbors find time on Tuesday, August twenty-sixth, for voting for Dr. McGovern. If you can not go to the polls before going to work, be sure to go there after work. Let's give the popular official a tremendous majority.

In the United States there is one doctor for every 725 persons.

HAS LONG RECORD OF ACHIEVEMENTS

Those familiar with the San Mateo county political situation for years are making a survey of the campaign now in progress and have advanced their prognostications as they appear now. One race in particular has held their interest and that is the three-cornered fight for county surveyor.

George A. Kneese, incumbent, they agree has a decided lead and many of those inclined to back their prophecies materially are taking even money that he will eliminate his two opponents in the primary, August 26.

Friends Aiding Fight

The county surveyor is making a spirited fight and has the support of thousands of voters in every section of San Mateo county. He has been in office for nearly twelve years and his successful administration has won him thousands of friends who are rallying to his support now. They have voluntarily designated themselves as campaign workers and are exerting every effort in behalf of the county surveyor's candidacy.

They point to Kneese's long record of achievements and economical administration in both private and public work. They cite the fact that he has grown up with the county and knows its people and its needs better, perhaps, because of the close touch he has kept on its growth and progress. They advance the census figures to prove their contention that Kneese has had no small part in helping to place San Mateo county foremost in the state of California for progress in the past decade.

These thousands of supporters set forth the confidence that the various communities have expressed in Kneese by calling on him for advice and help whenever they have civic improvement problems confronting them. They cite the many major highway, water and other projects he has engineered, not only for the county, but for nearly every municipality in the county.

The tribute paid Kneese by the State Highway Commission by naming him many times as their representative engineer to supervise state projects in San Mateo county, is set forth by these supporters as further proof of his marked ability and record for economic achievement.

Among other things that make it easy to win voters to the Kneese cause, his campaigners say, are his integrity, prestige, pleasing personality and his desire to be of service to those making San Mateo county their home.

It is known that Kneese has the backing of the leading engineering societies and hundreds of prominent business and professional men in the county, in addition to the thousands of friends he has made during his twelve years of county service. His friends are determined to get out a record vote for the primary and express confidence that the citizens of the county will retain the county surveyor by an overwhelming majority.

RELIEF FROM CURSE OF CONSTIPATION

A Battle Creek physician says, "Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause."

But immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Rexall Orderlies has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the lazy, dry, evacuating bowel called the colon. The water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or ever increasing the dose.

Stop suffering from constipation. Chew a Rexall Orderlie at night. Next day bright. Get 24 for 25c today at the nearest Rexall Drug Store. Edwards' Drug Store, Mission street, near San Jose avenue. —Adv.

SERVING 84,000,000 AMERICANS

Recent statistics disclose that use of electricity in American homes has increased more than 50 per cent during the past three years. In 1926 we employed 6,345,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electric power for domestic purposes; in 1929, this rose to 9,787,000,000. The average consumption of electricity by domestic customers is now about 500 kilowatt hours a year, as compared with 220 in 1913. And, to complete the imposing statistical array of facts, the electric industry now serves 20,000,000 domestic customers, representing a population of approximately 84,000,000.

The amaing growth of the industry is attributed to four main causes: The large annual increase in the number of customers; the largely increased use of electric appliances; increased lighting and better illumination in the average home; and, perhaps most important of all, the fact that cost of electricity per kilowatt-hour is now 28 per cent below the 1913 standard, while the general cost of living is 71 per cent above.

With the exception of those things that are vital to the maintenance of human life, it would probably be the general consensus of public opinion that electricity is one of the most indispensable commodities. It is directly responsible for our modern high standard of working and living conditions. It has, by giving the worker increased production, helped the trend toward higher wages and shorter hours. And it costs the average person less than two cents per day.

FARM CLUB WORK

Rural boys and girls are far outstripping their parents in the study of improved practices in farm and home work, according to a recent announcement by the Department of Agriculture, which shows that more demonstrations have been conducted by young people's clubs than by those of adult membership.

Considerably more than half a million farm boys and girls now participate in these demonstrations, which include the raising of various crops, animal husbandry, the handling of poultry, food preparation, designing and making of clothing, home improvement and beautification, and in fact every phase of rural life.

Instruction in these activities, imparted by farm and home demonstration agents, serves to aid these boys and girls in improving rural farm and home practices, thereby fitting them to become efficient farmers and home makers, besides teaching them the fundamentals of public-spirited, useful citizenship.

While the enrollment and results obtained in club work are gratifying, considering the circumstances under which this effort has been put forth, the Department points out that only about one rural boy and girl in twenty has the benefit of this training at present.

Here is a field for constructive achievement which should interest all who have a regard for the importance of improving the conditions of rural living.

HOW TRAINING COUNTS

An unusually striking illustration of the value of training is afforded through a study of casualty records during the World war. The Central powers mobilized 22,850,000 men and inflicted casualties numbering about 22,090,000 upon the allied forces. The allies mobilized 42,189,444 men, yet inflicted only 15,405,000 casualties upon the armies of the Central powers.

In other words, in the case of the highly trained troops of the Central powers and average of nearly one casualty was inflicted upon the allies for every man mobilized, while it took nearly three men of the allies to inflict one casualty upon the enemy.

Allowance must be made for the long distances some of the allied troops had to be transported, and the fact that a good many never got to the front, still their greater losses were chiefly due to the time consumed in training, which gave the enemy, with well trained and equipped troops from the beginning, a tremendous advantage, until overwhelmed by sheer force of numbers.

As with an army, so with an individual. The trained man has a great advantage in every walk of life.

After the first eighty years the hardest ordeals are the birthday interviews.

Citizenship and Patriotism

THE WORLD WAR again proved to all nations the intense patriotism that dwells in the heart of every American. There is an increasing appreciation of the rights of citizenship on the part of American citizens, though the records show that the majority of towns and cities are lacking in the spirit of citizenship in local affairs and elections.

The crying need in our community life is that every citizen become an ACTIVE citizen; for a community can rise no higher than its citizenship.

Many residents are not registered, probably not one in three so-called citizens vote in primaries, in school or judicial elections. The vote is generally small in local elections. In other words. many of us are not "good" citizens—we do not exercise our franchise of citizenship.

A community cannot be well governed—cannot hope to have an efficient and economical administration of many of the most vital aspects of its life, if its citizens are not actively civic minded. More than one-half the taxes are raised for local distribution. Yet, normally, more people vote in national and state elections than vote in local elections.

Is that good business?

The least a citizen, man or woman, can do is to show an intelligent interest in public affairs, both national and local. The chief direct responsibility for the majority of us is to attain citizenship, establish residence, register, vote, serve on juries, be loyal and strive for an American standard of living.

Our town officials welcome awakened interest in civic affairs. It means much to our business men and property owners. All residents benefit by a renewed surge of civic energy.

As "two heads are better than one" so are "many heads better than a few" in the matter of local citizenship and patriotism. Remember, a town can be no better than its individual citizens.

Local citizenship and patriotism are deserving of a large amount of consideration on the part of all of us. In these we can SHOW the superiority of

CALIFORNIA STILL BOASTS HIGHEST POWER TOWERS

Two new 425-foot towers, which carry the Baton Rouge Electric Company's transmission lines across the Mississippi river at Baton Rouge, La., were recently described in a magazine article as the "tallest river-crossing towers in this country." Whoever made the statement must have forgotten about the Pacific Gas and Electric Company lines across the Sacramento river at Antioch. The towers that carry these lines are 459 feet high, 34 feet higher than those at Baton Rouge.

TOO LITTLE MILK USED

Like most products of the farm, milk and cream have suffered a decline in price during recent months. But if an intensive campaign for the ecouragement of a greater use of milk were made, both the dairy industry and the public would be better off.

In a recent statement, O. E. Reed, of the Department of Agriculture, pointed out that the per capita consumption of milk in the United States is much lower than in several other nations.

Although much valuable work has been done by health authorities, home demonstration agents and parent-teachers' associations in the direction of educating the public to the nutritive value of milk and milk products, we still consume far less milk than would be good for us. This applies to adults and children alike.

By drinking an extra half pint of milk a day, nearly everyone might enjoy personal benefits, in addition to aiding a most worth national industry.

Miss Dorothy Galbraith, 18, Miss Esther Warner, 24, and Mrs. Helen Gillespie 30, all made solo flights after only one day of instruction at Roosevelt flying field, Long Island.

EAGLES' THEATRE PARTY A SUCCESS

The Eagles' theatre party was held last Wednesday night in the New State Theatre, and proved to be a tremendous success in every way.

Much credit is due the management of the Daly City Theatre and the New State Theatre, and also the various committees in charge of the affair.

Those who were present were well repaid for having attended the Eagles' theatre party, which will long be remembered as a most pleasing and satisfying evening of enjoyment.

The program included Marg, Codd and Zan, the three personality girls; Ned Johnson, the Nutty Nut; Grace Fields in "Cycle of Songs"; Don and Zim, comedy singing and dancing; Bert Lloyd at the piano.

The feature picture was "Dames Ahoy," and met with general approval of the well-wishers of the Eagles, who filled the house at both performances.

BREAKS SPEED LIMIT AND LANDS IN JAIL

Charged with driving through the streets at 70 miles an hour Mrs. Nancy Strandquist wife of Captain Eric V. Strandquist, master mariner, was arrested last Monday and placed in jail in San Francisco.

The arrest came after a wild chase by State Traffic Officer Anthony Burconie up the peninsula highway from Lawndale to Mission and Huron streets in San Francisco, Burconie said.

Mrs. Strandquist passed him in Lawndale at a speed of about 70 miles an hour, Burconie said. While he pursued her she narrowly avoided several collisions.

Mrs. Strandquist resisted arrest, it was stated, and he was obliged to place handcuffs on her wrists. She was accompanied by her six year old son, George. Her husband in Redwood City was notified that she was under arrest and arranged for bail.

The New York Times asks, "Are Poets Persecuted?" They must be, judging by the sadness of most of their stuff.

Auto production is 31 per cent below last year. Which is good news only for pedestrians.

SPLINTERS

From the H. H. Smith Lumber Yard

VOLUME 4 FRIDAY, AUGUST 1, 1930 NUMBER 1

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

Mrs. B. (writing to beloved traveler husband): "Dearest, day and night my thoughts are with you always. Sleeping, I dream of you; waking in the morning and seeing your bathrobe hanging on the bedpost, I wish it were you."

Ask "ABERDEEN" users. They are our best advertisements. (It's different.)

Why Worry

Constable: "Let me see your driving license."

Girl: "Well, as a matter of fact, I don't happen to have it on me, but if it will save you any bother, I can assure you it's very much like any other jolly old driving license."

"Brother Johnson," said the parson, "can't you all donate some small contribution to de cemetery fund for fencing in de culled cemetery"

"I dunno as I kin, parson," replied Bro. Johnson. "I don't see no use in a fence around a cemetery. You see, them what's in there can't get out, and them what's out sho' doan' wants to get in."

Calveras Cement—Rock, Sand, Gravel, Etc.

"Well, Buster, what are you going to give your little brother on his birthday?"

"I dunno. I gave him the measles last year."

She: "You remind me of the ocean."

He: "Wild, romantic, restless?"

She: "No, you just make me sick."

Not For Them

First Tramp: "Say, pard, do you think airship passenger service will ever become practical"

Second Tramp: "No, I don't see how gen'men like us will be able to hang on."

Lump Coal For Furnaces. Hand picked.

"Do you still wake up with a grouch?"

"No, I divorced him."

Tooting your horn as you turn a blind curve on the highway is like hugging an old maid—probably it won't do any harm.
